Biographical Note

Camp David is the country retreat for the President of the United States. It is located near Thurmont, Maryland. Its official name is the Naval Support Facility Thurmont. Camp David has been used by every president originating with President Franklin D. Roosevelt. During World War II President Roosevelt wanted a retreat that was within proximity to Washington D.C. that could also maintain Presidential security. In 1942 President Roosevelt had originally named the compound Shangri-La. During President Dwight D. Eisenhower's administration the compound was renamed Camp David in honor of the President's grandson. The current names for the cabins are also believed to have originated from the Eisenhower administration. The subsequent presidents after President Roosevelt have all frequented Camp David at their own leisure, typically as weekend trips because of its convenient location. President George Bush was a frequent visitor of Camp David during his presidency and hosted numerous foreign leaders at this venue. Camp David was also used for meetings and family visits under the Bush administration. The camp continues to be utilized as a presidential retreat right up to the current administration.

These Camp David records were created or obtained by Commander Michael Berry who served as Commander of Camp David from July 1988 to August 1991. In this capacity he was responsible for maintaining the camp, providing security, and supervising personnel. Originally from Kansas City, Kansas. Commander Berry was commissioned as an Ensign, Civil Engineer Corps, in 1972 at the Officer Candidate School, Newport, RI. Prior to being the Commander of Camp David, Commander Berry served as the Deputy Director, Acquisition Department of the Atlantic Division, Naval Facilities Engineering Command, Norfolk, VA.
