Dear Mr. President:

Clearly, your time and attention are quite properly consumed at this time by a crisis of the greatest urgency and the most profound consequences for America and the world.

However, because of these far-reaching consequences, I wanted to share some interesting information with you.

Last week, I commissioned a highly respected firm to conduct the attached public survey on how Americans feel about the impact of Middle East oil disruption on national energy policy. I was heartened by the results.

The survey clearly demonstrates that there now exists an unprecedented opportunity to adopt a strong new national energy policy. The people understand the realities of our situation and have a firm grasp of policies which can help the U.S. better manage its dependence on imported oil and better diversify its sources of foreign supplies. These initiatives include programs for expanded production of U.S. energy resources and putting U.S. oil companies on a more competitive basis in foreign exploration.

This survey indicates there is now broad public support for a major energy policy initiative. We hope to meet with key members of Congress and Administration officials in coming weeks to familiarize them with the survey results and conclusions.

I hope you will agree that we have an opportunity which must not be lost and that you will endorse legislative initiatives.

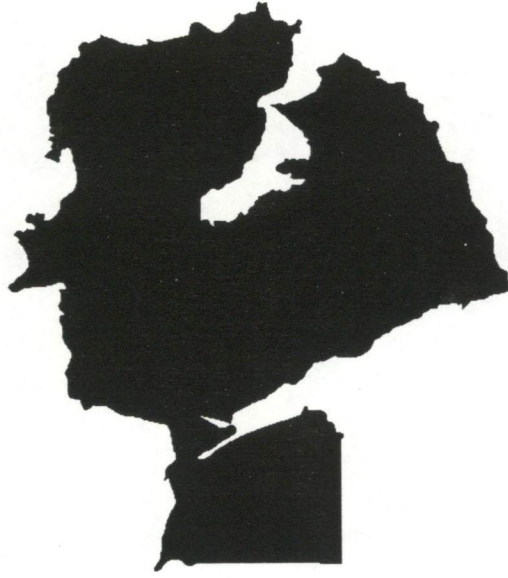

Needless to say; you have my complete support and heartfelt prayers for the success of your plans and policies in the difficult days ahead.

Sincerely yours,

JWK:jc
