MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

THROUGH:  THE EXECUTIVE CLERK

FROM:  BRENT SCOWCROFT

SUBJECT:  Report to Congress on Iraq

Purpose

To transmit to four congressional committees a report on Iraqi military capabilities.

Background

You are required by Public Law 101-513 to report to four committees of Congress on the status of Iraqi military capabilities. State has prepared the report (Tab B) which has inter-agency clearance.

RECOMMENDATION

That you sign the letters at Tab A transmitting the report to four committees of Congress.

Dear Mr. Chairman:

Under cover of this letter I am transmitting to the Senate and House Committees on Appropriations, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs the report on Iraq's Offensive Military Capability required by section 586J(b) of the Foreign Operations Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1991 (Public Law 101-513).

This interim assessment of Iraq's offensive military capability and its effect on the Middle East balance of power includes an assessment of Iraq's power projection capability, the prospects for another sustained conflict with Iran, joint Iraqi-Jordanian cooperation, the threat Iraq's arms transfer activities pose to U.S. allies in the Middle East, and the potential extension of Iraq's political-military influence into Africa and Latin America.

The report unfortunately cannot be produced in an unclassified form. I recommend to your attention, however, the January 22, 1992, testimony on Iraqi unconventional weapons capabilities by Robert Gates before the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Sincerely,

Report to the Congress as Required by Public Law 101-513 on Iraq's Offensive Military Capability

This interim assessment of Iraq's offensive military capability and its effect on the Middle East balance of power has been prepared pursuant to Public Law 101-513. It includes an assessment of Iraq's power projection capability, the prospects for another sustained conflict with Iran, joint Iraqi-Jordanian military cooperation, the threat Iraq's arms transfer activities pose to United States allies in the Middle East, and the extension of Iraq's political-military influence into Africa and Latin America. (U)

Overall Military Prospects

Iraq still has some capabilities to launch limited conventional attacks on Jordan, Kuwait, and Saudi Arabia. Iraq will not be able to defeat Iran, Turkey or Syria militarily for the indefinite future. Iraq nevertheless could hold major population centers in the region at risk if it succeeds in retaining operational ballistic missiles with CW or BW warheads despite UN sanctions. (S/ (b)3)

Iraq's behavior in obstructing, concealing, and misrepresenting its weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missile programs to the UN Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency raises serious concern over Iraq's longer-term ambitions. Consequently, we conclude that Saddam Hussein's intent in subverting UN Security Council Resolution 687 represents a policy aimed at retaining a capability for producing weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear weapons, and ballistic missiles. Saddam probably believes he can outlast the UN inspection regime and resume work on his programs once the UN has substantially reduced its presence. (S/ (b)3)

For a full examination of the political context, see National Intelligence Estimate 36.2-91 (September 1991): Iraq's Saddam Hussein: Prospects for Survival Over the Next Year. (S/ (b)3)
Power Projection Capabilities

Iraq has the following offensive ground and air assets at its disposal. Its offensive naval assets are negligible. (G/(b)(3)

Ground Forces. There are now 30-odd understrength divisions (compared with 70 full-strength in January 1991); this includes seven Republican Guard divisions and amounts to a total strength of some 300,000-500,000 men (i.e. roughly half the size of Iraq's forces in July 1990). The heavy equipment presently available (over 2000 tanks and over 3000 armored vehicles) would be sufficient for around 10 armored or mechanized divisions. Most of this equipment is in Guard units; other armored and mechanized divisions now consist mainly of infantry units. (G/(b)(3)

Many of these divisions are deployed in the north; five of the seven Guard divisions are around Baghdad and a few regular Army divisions are in the south. The regular Army is deployed to combat insurgent operations in the north and south, as well to guard the border with Iran. The Republican Guard is concentrated around Baghdad to keep Saddam's most loyal forces at hand. It also serves as a central reserve, able to dispatch forces to other areas for internal security duties or to meet any threat from Iran as required. (G/(b)(3)

Saddam appears to be rebuilding and reconstituting the ground forces in ways that maximize their political reliability without detracting from their long-term military effectiveness. Although he is reducing the size of the Army, he is consolidating understrength Guard units into fewer but stronger units, at the expense of regular Army units. Guard headquarters and divisions are being garrisoned in the Baghdad area, regular Army units mostly far from the capital. (G/(b)(3)

Air Forces. Iraq's tactical airpower capability has been seriously reduced by losses of pilots and aircraft during the war, the absence of training to maintain proficiency, the degradation of command and control facilities, and the destruction of airfield and maintenance facilities. Some reconstruction is under way, and Baghdad maintains almost all surviving combat aircraft at its least damaged operating bases. (G/(b)(3)

Some 330 operational fighters and fighter-bombers remain from Iraq's prewar inventory. Iran still holds over 100 Iraqi combat aircraft and is not likely to return them. The Iraqi combat helicopter force survived almost intact and currently is helping suppress the Shia and Kurdish rebellions. Moderate levels of helicopter activity could be supported by the remaining helicopter maintenance facilities and pilots and ground personnel. (G/(b)(3)
Prospects for War with Iran

The likelihood of full-scale conflict with Iran in the near term is low, though skirmishing and accidental small-scale military encounters remain likely. Neither Iran nor Iraq has the offensive capability to defeat the other militarily. Both are determined to develop and field weapons of mass destruction, and future conflicts could be particularly lethal. (§)(b)(3)

Iraqi-Iranian tensions have been endemic throughout this century. At present, Saddam remains concerned over Iranian support for the Iraqi opposition, and hopes to lessen this support by pursuing improved relations with Tehran. In addition, Saddam would like to reduce his isolation, bring about the release of POWs, and gain the return to Iraq of military planes safehavened in Iran. Tehran, however, is conducting a more assertive policy toward Baghdad, including support for Shia dissidents in southern Iraq. Bilateral relations are likely to remain strained. Iran seeks a comprehensive settlement of its war with Iraq on the basis of UNSCR 598 and is reluctant to give up sources of pressure on Iraq. (§)(b)(3)

Prospects for Military Cooperation with Jordan

Jordan is the major transit point for international trade with Iraq. Its stated policy is to enforce UN sanctions; most commerce with Iraq has been consistent with UN sanctions. Jordan has recently implemented new measures to further tighten the border but more needs to be done to ensure full compliance. There are indications that Iraq perceives this interference to be reaching unacceptable levels, and that it may threaten to cut off Jordan’s petroleum supply. At present Jordan has no practical alternative to Iraqi oil. Any Iraqi threat must take into account Jordan’s ability to shut down legal transit trade. Amman understands that any resumption of military cooperation could cause irreparable damage to its relations with the West, especially with the United States, and with Iraq’s opponents, particularly Saudi Arabia. (§)

Prospects for Iraqi Arms Transfers

Iraq could attempt to transfer undeclared missiles or weapons of mass destruction components to other countries to protect them from discovery by UN inspection teams. This scenario is plausible only where a cooperative relationship already exists. There are no relationships that fully fit the criteria. Iraq is unlikely to entrust critical components to Jordan, much less to sympathetic but distant regimes in Sudan or Yemen. (§)(b)(3)
In the longer term, Iraqi transfers of conventional and unconventional weapons, or co-development programs with ambitious Arab regimes, are possible but unlikely in any significant scale. If military production resumes, Baghdad could sell arms to the lesser Arab and African states. A potentially more insidious threat would be the transfer of Iraqi technical expertise in nuclear, chemical, or biological weapons development to Middle East countries which have not progressed as far, but this also is unlikely in the foreseeable future. (b)(3)

Prospects for Extension of Iraqi Political-Military Influence into Africa and Latin America

Baghdad is in no position to have substantial political or military influence in Latin America or Sub-Saharan Africa, though Saddam will continue to lobby countries in both regions for support against UN sanctions, especially in the Non-aligned Movement where Baghdad has attempted, off and on since the 1970s, to carve out a leadership position for itself. While Saddam enjoys considerable popular support in the Maghreb, particularly inside Tunisia and Algeria, Baghdad's actual influence over the governments of the Maghreb remains extremely limited. (b)(3)

If and when Iraq again flaunts its weapons capabilities, some African Arab nationalist elements may well look to Iraq as a successful symbol of military-technical progress in the face of determined Western opposition. Some African countries such as Mauritania have in the past been willing to engage in low-level military cooperation with Iraq in exchange for military supplies. Nevertheless, most incumbent governments in the Maghreb and the Horn will eschew further political-military cooperation, particularly if Saddam Hussein remains in power. (b)(3)
DRAFT TRANSMITTAL LETTER

Dear Mr. Chairman:

Under cover of this letter I am transmitting to the Committees on Appropriations, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, the report on Iraq's Offensive Military Capability as required by Public Law 101-513.

This interim assessment of Iraq's offensive military capability and its effect on the Middle East balance of power includes an assessment of Iraq's power projection capability, the prospects for another sustained conflict with Iran, joint Iraqi-Jordanian cooperation, the threat Iraq's arms transfer activities pose to U.S. allies in the Middle East, and the potential extension of Iraq's political-military influence into Africa and Latin America.

The report unfortunately cannot be produced in an unclassified form. I recommend to your attention, however, the January 22, 1992, testimony on Iraqi unconventional weapons capabilities by Robert Gates before the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Report to the Congress
as Required by Public Law 101-513
on Iraq's Offensive Military Capability

This interim assessment of Iraq's offensive military capability and its effect on the Middle East balance of power has been prepared pursuant to Public Law 101-513. It includes an assessment of Iraq's power projection capability, the prospects for another sustained conflict with Iran, joint Iraqi-Jordanian military cooperation, the threat Iraq's arms transfer activities pose to United States allies in the Middle East, and the extension of Iraq's political-military influence into Africa and Latin America. (U)

Overall Military Prospects

Iraq still has some capabilities to launch limited conventional attacks on Jordan, Kuwait, and Saudi Arabia. Iraq will not be able to defeat Iran, Turkey or Syria militarily for the indefinite future. Iraq nevertheless could hold major population centers in the region at risk if it succeeds in retaining operational ballistic missiles with CW or BW warheads despite UN sanctions. (S\textregistered\(\text{b}(3)\)

Iraq's behavior in obstructing, concealing, and misrepresenting its weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missile programs to the UN Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency raises serious concern over Iraq's longer-term ambitions. Consequently, we conclude that Saddam Hussein's intent in subverting UN Security Council Resolution 687 represents a policy aimed at retaining a capability for producing weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear weapons, and ballistic missiles. Saddam probably believes he can outlast the UN inspection regime and resume work on his programs once the UN has substantially reduced its presence. (S\textregistered\(\text{b}(3)\)

For a full examination of the political context, see National Intelligence Estimate 36.2-91 (September 1991): Iraq's Saddam Hussein: Prospects for Survival Over the Next Year. (S\textregistered\(\text{b}(3)\)
Power Projection Capabilities

Iraq has the following offensive ground and air assets at its disposal. Its offensive naval assets are negligible. (\(\textsc{g/}(\text{(b)(3)})\))

Ground Forces. There are now 30-odd understrength divisions (compared with 70 full-strength in January 1991); this includes seven Republican Guard divisions and amounts to a total strength of some 300,000-500,000 men (i.e. roughly half the size of Iraq's forces in July 1990). The heavy equipment presently available (over 2000 tanks and over 3000 armored vehicles) would be sufficient for around 10 armored or mechanized divisions. Most of this equipment is in Guard units; other armored and mechanized divisions now consist mainly of infantry units. (\(\textsc{g/}(\text{(b)(3)})\))

Many of these divisions are deployed in the north; five of the seven Guard divisions are around Baghdad and a few regular Army divisions are in the south. The regular Army is deployed to combat insurgent operations in the north and south, as well to guard the border with Iran. The Republican Guard is concentrated around Baghdad to keep Saddam's most loyal forces at hand. It also serves as a central reserve, able to dispatch forces to other areas for internal security duties or to meet any threat from Iran as required. (\(\textsc{g/}(\text{(3)})\))

Saddam appears to be rebuilding and reconstituting the ground forces in ways that maximize their political reliability without detracting from their long-term military effectiveness. Although he is reducing the size of the Army, he is consolidating understrength Guard units into fewer but stronger units, at the expense of regular Army units. Guard headquarters and divisions are being garrisoned in the Baghdad area, regular Army units mostly far from the capital. (\(\textsc{g/}(\text{(3)})\))

Air Forces, Iraq's tactical airpower capability has been seriously reduced by losses of pilots and aircraft during the war, the absence of training to maintain proficiency, the degradation of command and control facilities, and the destruction of airfield and maintenance facilities. Some reconstruction is under way, and Baghdad maintains almost all surviving combat aircraft at its least damaged operating bases. (\(\textsc{g/}(\text{(b)(3)})\))

Some 330 operational fighters and fighter-bombers remain from Iraq's prewar inventory. Iran still holds over 100 Iraqi combat aircraft and is not likely to return them. The Iraqi combat helicopter force survived almost intact and currently is helping suppress the Shia and Kurdish rebellions. Moderate levels of helicopter activity could be supported by the remaining helicopter maintenance facilities and pilots and ground personnel. (\(\textsc{g/}(\text{(b)(3)})\))
Prospects for War with Iran

The likelihood of full-scale conflict with Iran in the near term is low, though skirmishing and accidental small-scale military encounters remain likely. Neither Iran nor Iraq has the offensive capability to defeat the other militarily. Both are determined to develop and field weapons of mass destruction, and future conflicts could be particularly lethal. (\(\text{#(3)}\)

Iraqi-Iranian tensions have been endemic throughout this century. At present, Saddam remains concerned over Iranian support for the Iraqi opposition, and hopes to lessen this support by pursuing improved relations with Tehran. In addition, Saddam would like to reduce his isolation, bring about the release of POWs, and gain the return to Iraq of military planes safehavened in Iran. Tehran, however, is conducting a more assertive policy toward Baghdad, including support for Shia dissidents in southern Iraq. Bilateral relations are likely to remain strained. Iran seeks a comprehensive settlement of its war with Iraq on the basis of UNSCR 598 and is reluctant to give up sources of pressure on Iraq. (\(\text{#(3)}\)

Prospects for Military Cooperation with Jordan

Jordan is the major transit point for international trade with Iraq. Its stated policy is to enforce UN sanctions; most commerce with Iraq has been consistent with UN sanctions. Jordan has recently implemented new measures to further tighten the border but more needs to be done to ensure full compliance. There are indications that Iraq perceives this interference to be reaching unacceptable levels, and that it may threaten to cut off Jordan’s petroleum supply. At present Jordan has no practical alternative to Iraqi oil. Any Iraqi threat must take into account Jordan’s ability to shut down legal transit trade. Amman understands that any resumption of military cooperation could cause irreparable damage to its relations with the West, especially with the United States, and with Iraq’s opponents, particularly Saudi Arabia. (\(\text{#(3)}\)

Prospects for Iraqi Arms Transfers

Iraq could attempt to transfer undeclared missiles or weapons of mass destruction components to other countries to protect them from discovery by UN inspection teams. This scenario is plausible only where a cooperative relationship already exists. There are no relationships that fully fit the criteria. Iraq is unlikely to entrust critical components to Jordan, much less to sympathetic but distant regimes in Sudan or Yemen. (\(\text{#(3)}\)
In the longer term, Iraqi transfers of conventional and unconventional weapons, or co-development programs with ambitious Arab regimes, are possible but unlikely in any significant scale. If military production resumes, Baghdad could sell arms to the lesser Arab and African states. A potentially more insidious threat would be the transfer of Iraqi technical expertise in nuclear, chemical, or biological weapons development to Middle East countries which have not progressed as far, but this also is unlikely in the foreseeable future. (§/ (b)(3))

Prospects for Extension of Iraqi Political-Military Influence into Africa and Latin America

Baghdad is in no position to have substantial political or military influence in Latin America or Sub-Saharan Africa, though Saddam will continue to lobby countries in both regions for support against UN sanctions, especially in the Non-aligned Movement where Baghdad has attempted, off and on since the 1970s, to carve out a leadership position for itself. While Saddam enjoys considerable popular support in the Maghreb, particularly inside Tunisia and Algeria, Baghdad's actual influence over the governments of the Maghreb remains extremely limited. (§/ (b)(3))

If and when Iraq again flaunts its weapons capabilities, some African Arab nationalist elements may well look to Iraq as a successful symbol of military-technical progress in the face of determined Western opposition. Some African countries such as Mauritania have in the past been willing to engage in low-level military cooperation with Iraq in exchange for military supplies. Nevertheless, most incumbent governments in the Maghreb and the Horn will eschew further political-military cooperation, particularly if Saddam Hussein remains in power. (§/ (b)(3))

Dear Mr. Chairman:

Under cover of this letter I am transmitting to the Senate and House Committees on Appropriations, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs the report on Iraq's Offensive Military Capability required by section 586J(b) of the Foreign Operations Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1991 (Public Law 101-513).

This interim assessment of Iraq's offensive military capability and its effect on the Middle East balance of power includes an assessment of Iraq's power projection capability, the prospects for another sustained conflict with Iran, joint Iraqi-Jordanian cooperation, the threat Iraq's arms transfer activities pose to U.S. allies in the Middle East, and the potential extension of Iraq's political-military influence into Africa and Latin America.

The report unfortunately cannot be produced in an unclassified form. I recommend to your attention, however, the January 22, 1992, testimony on Iraqi unconventional weapons capabilities by Robert Gates before the Senate Armed Services Committee.
