REPORT TO THE CONGRESS IN ACCORDANCE WITH PUBLIC LAW 101-513

STEPS TAKEN BY OTHER NATIONS, BOTH BEFORE AND AFTER THE AUGUST 2, 1990, INVASION OF KUWAIT, TO CURTAIL THE EXPORT OF GOODS, SERVICES, AND TECHNOLOGIES TO IRAQ WHICH MIGHT CONTRIBUTE TO, OR ENHANCE, IRAQ'S NUCLEAR, BIOLOGICAL, CHEMICAL AND BALLISTIC MISSILE CAPABILITY.

Under the terms of United Nations Security Council Resolution 687 of April 3, 1991, Iraq remains under a strict embargo, with the exception of food and medicine. The U.N. Sanctions Committee may, in addition, approve the export to Iraq of essential civilian items. The Committee has not authorized any exports to Iraq deemed to contribute to or enhance Iraq's nuclear, biological or chemical weapons or ballistic missile capability.

The United Nations Special Commission on Iraq (UNSCOM) continues to focus on inspection and destruction of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction capabilities pursuant to UN Security Council Resolutions 687 and 707.

UNSCOM celebrated its one year anniversary on April 15, 1992. In the past year, UNSCOM and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) have conducted 34 inspections--11 nuclear, 10 ballistic missile, 8 chemical, 2 biological, one combined chemical and biological and two chemical destruction.

An Iraqi delegation led by Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz appeared before the UN Security Council in mid-March 1992 to argue that Iraq had complied with the relevant U.N. Security Council Resolutions. The U.N. Security Council refused to accept their claim. On March 19 Iraq submitted a letter to UNSCOM Chairman Rolf Ekeus with additional weapons of mass destruction (WMD) declarations, including a large number of extended-range SCUD missiles and several launchers and a number of chemical warheads and chemical bombs. Iraq indicated it was prepared to fully comply with UNSCOM's demands to destroy ballistic missile equipment and provide a "comprehensive, complete, and final" dossier regarding its WMD programs. This full disclosure has not yet been received, although it was promised for early April. Based on a pattern of Iraqi deception, some skepticism about Iraq's disclosure is warranted.

Destruction has begun in three areas: nuclear, missile, and chemical weapons. During the eleventh nuclear inspection from April 8-15, the destruction of the Al Atheer nuclear weapons production facility began. Five buildings and 29 pieces of equipment were destroyed. The twelfth nuclear inspection is completing the process of destroying three remaining buildings, including the laboratories at Hatteen. Several other Iraqi nuclear facilities will be named for destruction by the IAEA.

The first chemical weapons destruction team visited Iraq from February 21 to March 24. The team supervised the destruction of 463 122-millimeter rockets at the Khamissiyah storage site. Those destroyed included fully, partially, and unfilled rockets. The chemical agent fill was sarin, a nerve agent. Chemical weapons destruction is expected to continue for up to a year.

The ninth missile team (March 21-29) began the process of verifying Iraq's most recent declaration. The team saw parts of 86 of the recently declared 89 Al Hussein missiles which Iraq claimed to have destroyed last year, and monitored destruction of dual-use missile production equipment. The tenth ballistic missile team (April 13-21) returned to solid propellant missile facilities to destroy dual-use ballistic missile production equipment.

The next challenge for UNSCOM and IAEA will be to implement their long term monitoring strategies as called for in the relevant U.S. Security Council Resolutions (707 and 715). The United States believes that a significant and permanent UN presence in Iraq will be required to monitor Iraq's long-term compliance of the UN resolutions.

Aside from steps taken specifically with regard to Iraq, the international community has continued to take important measures to strengthen non-proliferation export controls. These measures are aimed at curbing the supply of material, equipment and technology sought by countries like Iraq for use in developing nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons and missile capabilities. Information on these steps is contained in the reports submitted to the Congress in accordance with PL 95-242, PL 101-510, and PL 102-192.
